Always look at the package expiration date.

Keep packages away from raw meats to prevent cross-contamination.

Check packages for any damage or produce that doesn’t look fresh.

Store salad greens in the refrigerator in the crisper drawer.

Salads make a nutritious meal or an easy addition of green color into the daily diet and can be found at almost any restaurant or grocery store.

Consumers also know packaged lettuce for E. coli outbreaks and a cause of foodborne illness.

Between 1998 and 2019, 36 outbreaks have occurred linked to mostly romaine lettuce.

According to a recent USDA study, E. Coli was more likely to be found on lettuce harvested in the fall than on lettuce harvested in the late spring. Overall bacterial contamination, E. Coli survival rate, and lettuce deterioration varied by season.

When shopping for bagged produce:
- Always look at the package expiration date.
- Keep packages away from raw meats to prevent cross-contamination.
- Check packages for any damage or produce that doesn’t look fresh.
- Store salad greens in the refrigerator in the crisper drawer.

Although romaine lettuce is more commonly linked to E. coli outbreaks, it hasn’t impacted domestic consumption.

According to a report from Colorado State University, romaine lettuce accounts for 30% of the lettuce consumed in the U.S. In 2017, the consumption of romaine and leaf lettuce increased to 12.5 pounds per person.

Darker greens have more nutritional benefits, while leafy greens are overall a great low-calorie food with fiber, folate and vitamins.

Because most leafy greens are grown near the ground, it is important to rinse fresh produce under running water before consumption. It is best to rinse leafy greens just before use and rub leaves with your fingers to remove visible contamination.
No Nightmares: Halloween Food Safety Tips
Temperatures are dropping and leaves are falling which means Halloween is quickly approaching. While the holiday is not always thought to be overly risky in terms of food safety, any time perishable foods are left out can be a nightmare.

Party goers should leave perishable foods such as meat and cheese trays, pasta dishes, or finger sandwiches in the refrigerator until the party starts.

Here are some tips on how to keep party food safe to eat:

- Arrange food on small platters so you can refrigerate and rotate food within two hours.
- Use party tray lids as coolers by filling them with ice and setting the trays on top.
- Store perishable treats. They should not be left out at room temperature for longer than two hours.
- Wait until dough and batters are fully cooked before taste testing.
- Beware of unpasteurized juice or cider, as it can contain harmful bacteria such as E. coli O157:H7 or Salmonella.

Be sure to wash your hands before preparing food and keep raw meats away from ready to eat foods to prevent cross contamination.

When planning a Halloween bash, keep in mind food allergies. To avoid allergic reactions, ask your guests beforehand if they have any food allergies. Keep in mind that sesame is now the ninth major food that can trigger allergic reactions.

Trick-or-treating can be a sticky situation if candy is not thoroughly inspected. Parents, please examine the treats to avoid any tricks that may be in your children's bags. If any treats are damaged or open, discard them.

When gathering treats to hand out, consider non-food items for kids with food allergies.

If you want to make sure your Halloween is a treat and not a trick, give your goblins a meal or snack before trick-or-treating to fuel them through the fun.

Happy haunting!
